Mr. Davis to the Ladies.

During the ceremonies connected with the laying of the corner stone of the Confederate monument at Jackson, Miss., Saturday, the following letter of regret from Mr. Jefferson Davis was read.

BEAUVOIR, MISS., May 21, 1888.

Ladies of the Confederate Monument Association of Mississippi: I duly received your gratifying invitation to my family and myself to be present at the laying of the corner stone of the monument to commemorate the dead of Mississippi, who died for the State. This acknowledgment has been delayed under the hope that my health would so improve as to enable me to participate in the ceremony. The ear-nest desire to be with you on that occasion led me to hope against the better judgment of tothers, that I might be physically able to join in a work which is very near my heart.

The monument will be the first reared by Mississippi to her sons, who at the call of their mother forgot all selfish cares and went forth, if need be, to die for her cause. Th's om ssion cannot be ascribed to the absence of meritorious claims to such consideration, for Mississippiaus have neither been of the war party in peace nor of the peace party in war. In the territorial infancy of our State, when population was mainly confined to a few river counties, Indian war, with its charact-ristic ferceity, was ravaging the frontier settlements. At the cry of the helpless, Mississippiaus rushed to arms, though few and illy prepared for war. Among the earliest of my memories was the grief of our people because of the massacre at Fort Mimms, where many of our neighbors died in the fulfilment of that noblest motive of human action, which auses one to give his life that others may live No monument for the instruction of the rising generation commemorates the event, and the commonly used school books are not devoted to Scattlean history. to Southern history. At Pensacola or Fort Bow-yer, and in the battle of New Orleans. Mississippi bore an honorable part. Your monument will stand in the county of Hinds, the name of the stand in the county of Hinds, the name of the leader of the Mississippi Dragoons, whose conduct in the battle of New Orleans was commended in general orders for the admiration of one army and the wonder of the other.

At a later day, when Mississippi sent a requisition for troops to serve in the war between the United States and Mexico, the difficulty was not to tet the requisite number of companies, but to discriminate among those offering in excess of the numbers which would be received. An attempt was made to build a monument to these who bied and died in a foreign land, but it failed; if asked was made to build a monument to these who see and died in a foreign land, but it failed; if asked why, the reason is on the surface—it was not woman's work. Daughters of Mississippi, you have labored in a cause, the righteousness of which on y he can deny whose s ul is so devoid of pstrictism that in his country's strife he could give aid and comfort to the enemy. It would have been a great gratification to me to stand among the survivors of Mississippi's army, and in among the survivors of all sissipples army, and the laying the corner stone of a monument to their deceated comrades to recall their virtues, the mingled attributes of the hero and the saint under this definition. Please be assued that in spirit I shall be with you, and for the zeal with which you have faced all discouragement and the devotion you have shown to a purpose which had all its next to be in the result of th only its merits for its reward, I pray y u to accept from the inmost fibre of his heart thanks of an old Mississippian. Faithfully.
